The Buddy System

We live in an anthropomorphized world, a place where we assign to our surroundings traits that reflect our own image. From this basic impulse the phenomena of the "Lil' Buddy" unwittingly arises.

Tapped directly into a human desire to relate through recognition, Lil' Buddies are rooted in a yearning of the spirit to see ourselves as part of everything and, vice versa, to see everything as part of us. Lil' Buddies negotiate that tendency towards universality by integrating human images directly into inanimate objects.

In this they are amazing; they are delightful, unpredictable and intuitive hybrids. Lil' Buddies Magazine hopes to be a showcase for their charm and magic - I truly hope you cherish these new friends as much as I do!

Stebbins' sled. Ahead of her the string of dim, wolflike shapes went racing southward along the frozen Stikine trail.

They had been traveling several hours before Stebbins addressed a word to his wife; and then he spoke in her native tongue, which Denny did not understand. Lizzie broke into a flood of gutturals which suggested protest. Stebbins snarled a command which reduced her to silence.

Not long after that he halted the team at a point where a frozen stream merged with the Stikine. The huskies threw themselves belly down on the snow. Denny was glad to climb out of her seat. When Lizzie handed her a sandwich she ate it, and at the same time eased her cramped muscles by walking a short distance along an almost obliterated snowshoe trail.

Stebbins finished his food and, to Denny's consternation, took a long drink from a bottle of rum.

"All aboard, Mrs. Bourne!" he sang out cheerfully.

She hurried back to the sled and climbed in, tucking the robes about her. Stebbins was busy thrusting articles into a knapsack. When he finished he tossed the bag
