EMBEDDEDNESS: ARTIST FILMS AND VIDEOS FROM KOREA 1960S TO NOW

Tate Modern, Starr Auditorium
18 – 19 September 2015
EMBEDDEDNESS: ARTIST FILMS AND VIDEOS FROM KOREA 1960S TO NOW
18 – 19 September
Tate Modern, Starr Auditorium
£5/£4 per screening

The first survey in the UK of Korean artists’ films and videos attempts to unwrap the particularity of experimental film and artist moving-image making over five decades from 1960s until now. The series focuses on the ways in which artists in South Korea have addressed the intrinsic conditions of cinema - namely duration and the collective viewing experience - and the changing social and political context that have defined the ways artists have been able to work. These screenings will attempt to map the continuities across various generations and the crucial role of artists organisations from the pioneering groups Avant-Garde (A.G.), The Fourth Group and Kaidu in the 1960s and 70s to the ongoing activities of the EXiS festival that continues to support artists practice with film and video in South Korea.

Curated by Hangjun Lee (EXiS), with Hyun Jin Cho (KCCUK) and George Clark (Tate Modern).

Organised in collaboration with the Korean Cultural Centre UK, EXiS and supported by LUX.

Tate Film is supported by LUMA Foundation.
Heung-soon Im, Sung Si / Jeju Symptom and Sign 2011, video still. Courtesy the artist

Nan Lee Swing Diary 1996, film still. Courtesy the artist

The opening programme focuses on pioneering works from the 1960s and 1970s including Kim Ku-lim’s The Meaning of 1/24 Second 1969, considered the first experimental film work from Korea and Lee Ik Tae’s From Morning and Evening 1970, considered the country’s first independent film. Working under restrictive political conditions, state censorship and with limited access to equipment or resources, artists either had to self-organise - such as the groups Avant-Garde (A.G.) and Cinepoem coterie / 시네포엠 동인회 (1964), The Fourth Group / 4집단 and Moving Image Research Group / 영상연구회 or work within the academy - such as women’s filmmaker group Kaidu / 카이두 founded at the Ewha Womans University in the 1970s.

Despite these activities the 1970s proved to be a difficult time for many artists in Korea following the declaration of martial law by the South Korean president Park Chung-hee that lasted from 1972 to 1979. During this time various artists began to turn to Performance Art as a means of realising work, often utilising film and photography as a medium to record and document their actions. Most prominent in the generation who turned to performance in this period was Lee Kun-yong who realised over 50 performance events between 1975 to 1979.

Followed by discussion with Kim Ku-lim
KOREAN ALPHABET
In-tae Kim / 김인태, Canada 1967, 16mm, colour, sound, 7 min

In-tae Kim has produced a number of cultural and educational films including Transportation and Postal Service 1958, Teeth and Health 1961 and Discussion Group for Farm Broadcasting 1962. He studied filmmaking at the National Film Board (NFB) of Canada between 1967-68 with the grant given by UNKRA (United Nations Korean Reconstruction Agency). While at NFB, he produced Korean Alphabet, an educational film designed to teach the Korean alphabet with a soundtrack created by Norman McLaren. Through this work, that received the Golden Prize for Educational Films at the Tehran International Film Festival in 1968, we can gain an insight into the scope and idea of cinema in Korea and how new technologies and experimental techniques were used to explore cinematic concepts for education.

THE MEANING OF 1/24 SECOND / 1/24 초의 의미
Kim Ku-lim / 김구림, Korea 1969, 16mm, color, silent, 11 min

Taking the basic structure of film, that consists of 24 frames per second, The Meaning of 1/24 Second expresses the harsh reality faced by modern humanity and the sense of alienation that comes from uncontrollable speed. Duration was a key concept in Kim’s artistic journey. The cinematic shape of this film was based on splicing every second image. Unable to make a finished film print at that time due to technological limitations, Kim was so worried about the unstable nature of the print given its many splices, that he prepared many additional elements for the premiere, including dancers and slide projectors. These turned the film premiere into a multi-projection performance or ‘happening’ than a screening. The event was held at the Academy Music Hall in Seoul on July 16 1969 when the media was filled with news of the imminent Apollo 11 moon landing. This artistic gesture is considered to be one of the first non-normative cinematic interventions in Korean moving image history. Although the original film was lost in 2001 a digital video copy remained that was used to create a 16mm print of the film for Kim Ku-Lim’s retrospective at the Seoul Museum of Art, Korea in 2013.
FROM MORNING TO EVENING / 아침과 저녁사이
Lee Ik-tae / 이익태, Korea 1970, 16mm, black & white, sound, 20 min

Although the situation of the Korean film industry at that time was positive, it was no doubt full of confusion and perversion. This movie was made to find a breakthrough in that situation. - Lee Ik Tae, 50 Independent Films, Korean Film Archive

Yi Hyo-in former head of Korean Film Archive and film critic called Lee’s From Morning To Evening Korea’s first independent film due to its shocking images, modernist techniques and rare insight into young people in the 1970s. The film follows a young man who wakes to find a woman in his bed, he ventures out into the city where he first seduces a woman in a park. Later he meets and has sex with another woman near the Seoul train station only to return to his apartment with a gift for the woman in his bed. From Morning To Evening premiered at YMCA Hall in May 1970 at a cinema screening with discussion about avant-garde movements. Lee founded one of the first independent production in Korea and produced several short films such as Whereabout of Light 1973 and Boring Afternoon 1973.

SECRET SPILL
Teresa Hak Kyung Cha / 차학경, 1974 USA, 16mm transferred to video, black and white, sound, 27 min

Theresa Hak Kyung Cha (1951-1982) is an influential Korean-American conceptual artist and novelist working in performance, video and installation, whose work focused on connection between language, memory and meaning. She was born in Pusan, Korea during the Korean War and in 1964 Cha’s family relocated to California. While studying at UC Berkley she attended Bertrand Augst’s class on structural and semiological film analysis, where Augst’s frame by frame analysis of films greatly inspired Cha’s own works. Secret Spill documents one of Cha’s early performances in the winter of 1974. The work posits the installation as a site of secrets, from which something spills in the form of vision, sound and touch. This transitional work marks Cha’s gradual shift from performance art to cinematic expression.

EVENT LOGICAL
Lee Kun-yong / 이건용, 1975 Korea, Super 8mm transferred to video, colour, silent, 12 min

Lee Kun-yong helped to open the horizon for contemporary art in Korean through his experimental approach to conceptual art, performance and installation. A member of the Avant-garde (A.G.) group as well as leader of the group Space & Time (S.T.) between 1969-80. When Lee attended the 8th Paris Biennale in 1973, the experience deeply changed his thinking and he began to consider that the body can be an artistic medium in itself. He focused on performance related to space, situation, site and the body, giving it the name ‘event’, drawing a line between ‘happenings’ which caught on during that period (after Allan Kaprow) and his own practice. From 1975 to 1979, Lee presented about 50 ‘events’ in different locations and exhibitions. Documentation of Lee’s performances is extremely rare: Identical Extent and Indoor Measurement were originally presented as part of the Today’s Methods group exhibition at the White Deer Gallery in April 1975, while Rope and Two People (originally titled Meeting) were originally presented as part of An Event by Four Artists at the Seoul Gallery in April 1976.
COLOR OF KOREA / 색동
Han Ok-hi / 한옥희, 1976 Korea, 16mm, colour, sound, 7 min

I wanted to explore the colors of Korea through this short movie. Koreans are called, ‘The White Clad Folk,’ and many people believe that white is the most Korean of all colors. But I wanted to question this thought and wanted to combine images with a variety of colors in an intensely personal manner. That’s why I searched for the colors of Korea in the colorful traditional clothes of children in their movement and play. This was my attempt 30 years ago to make a movie about the colors of Korea free from the limitations of form. - Han Ok-hi, 50 Independent Films, Korean Film Archive

Kaidu group was founded in 1974 by six artists who all studied at Ewha Womans University - Jeom-seon Kim, Junghee Lee, Soo-ae Hang, Myosook Jeong, Kyuwon Wang and Ok-hi Han who acted as the president. The name Kaidu is taken from the name of the legendary Mongolia heroine, a granddaughter of Genghis Khan celebrated for her beauty, intelligence and excellency in martial arts. The members of the Kaidu group sought to problematised the way women were depicted as passive and negative objects in Korean cinema. Kaidu group held experimental film screenings and symposium between 1974 and 1975 at Goethe Institute Seoul, USIS Korea. Since 1976 each member carried out her independent art practice. Han went onto produce various documentaries and industrial films including one of the first 70mm films made in Korea for the 1993 EXPO at Taejon called Running Korean / 달리는 한국인.

Programme duration: 85 min

Lee Ik-tae From Morning and Evening 1970, film still. Courtesy the artist
Teresa Hak Kyung Cha Secret Spill 1974, video still. Courtesy Electronic Arts Intermix (EAI), New York
Lee Kun-yong Event Logical 1975, film still. Courtesy the artist
Han Ok-hi Color of Korea 1976, film still. Courtesy the artist
ECSTATIC VISIONS
Saturday 19 September, 16.00–18.00

This programme features key works that show the opening up of artists’ film production in Korea following the democratic movements of the 1980s and 90s from the Uprising in Gwangju in 1980 to the June Democracy Movement that lead to the establishment of the Sixth Republic of Korea in 1987. Artists featured here arrived at experimental film from a number of different trajectories - as a form of rebellion against conventional filmmaking or having returned to Korea from studying overseas bringing a new awareness of international art and theory. The 1990s saw the founding of numerous festivals and organisations such as Indiforum Festival, Korean Independent Film Association, Korean Experimental Film Institute and the 1st Experimental Film Festival in 1994 held under the title ‘Ecstatic Visions: The Aesthetic of New Media Film’.

WET DREAM
Kim Yoon-tae / 김윤태, Korea 1992, 16mm, colour, sound, 15 min

This film was made at an experimental film workshop [run by Goethe Institute Seoul / Korean Film Council supervised by experimental filmmaker Christoph Janetzko] by and attempts in many ways to maintain a purely experimental spirit. It was made without a script like an improvisatory painting. We decided not to be limited by chronology and the continuity of temporal space within our storyline and character and therefore, the film was made through imaginative experimentation, producing inherent and subjective images. The film is structured to resemble the traditional three day funerary proceedings of Korea and it deals with corpses, obsessive carnal desire, the oppressive society, as well as claustrophobia. - Kim Yoon-tae, 50 Independent Films, Korean Film Archive

OVER ME / 오버 미
Lim Chang-Jae / 임창재, Korea 1996, 16mm, black and white, sound, 18 min

[Over Me is] a movie about the ghosts of memory which are trapped in the fragmented time of a woman, and the images of expressionless and lonely people which have been engraved in my memory. This was done through experimentation, by creating a labyrinth of images and meanings within the film. I constructed the movie by tracing the vestiges left by the spirit within that labyrinth. I constructed the movie by tracing the vestiges left by the spirit within that labyrinth. And what I felt was lacking in the construction of the movie, I filled in with my imagination. [...] My film, which ends with a sense of incompletion, was constructed through mere imaginative speculation, of the fragmentary pieces of a puzzle that the spirit left behind. [...] This film is a requiem for all the working men and women who have died in support for labour rights. This requiem, however, is sung in order to be not disheartened. - Lim Chang-Jae, programme catalogue, 17th independent film meet the audience, Independent Film Association, November 2000
CIRCULATION / 회
Park Donghyun / 박동현, Korea/USA 1998, 16mm loop, colour, sound, approx. 4 min

This film is a Möbius strip that consists of 365 frames. The actor [played by fellow Chicago Art Institute student Apichatpong Weerasethakul] is actually moving in one direction but appears to swing like a pendulum on the screen. Sporadic booms on the soundtrack reveal the relationship between the human pendulum movement, the rhythm of the soundtrack and its perforations, and the object split into individual frames. - Park Donghyun, Counter Production exhibition catalogue, Audiovisual Pavilion with EXiS 2015

SWING DIARY
Nan Lee / 이난, Korea 1996, 16mm, colour & black and white, sound, 13 min

During planning for a documentary on Korean jazz, I discovered analogies between swing and improvisation and documentation and fiction, and found myself wanting to unite the ‘real’ and the ‘fictional,’ [...] I attempted to reveal the truths of life through strict temporal-spatial divisions and formal structuring. The movie shows how we subconsciously improvise our way through our lives while ‘swinging’ to the rhythm of those around us. - Nan Lee, 50 Independent Films, Korean Film Archive

Swing Diary juxtaposes scenes of musical performances with fictional drama following a self-absorbed young man who desperate for money takes a role as a porn actor. Through a range of techniques merging documentary and experimental film with staged scenes and artificial confessions by the main actor, the film attempts to show the agony of survival. This film is based upon the form of an individual’s diary. I created new images using several chemical treatments on the film surface, multi-printing, etc. using footage of daily life recorded on film. This serial works were begun from trials that I had communicated seeking to re-construct my own memories, memories deeply connected with memory on film and with the film itself. The film is a conversation with personal documentary and everyday practice at darkroom. - Lee Jang-wook, EXiS 10th Anniversary Special DVD catalogue, 2013

1998
Suk, Sung-suk / 석성석, Germany / Korea 2002, 16mm, black and white / colour, silent, 6 min

The short experimental film 1998 is an edited compilation of different films made in four different places - Berlin, Paris, Daegu and Oksan between February and October 1998. [...] The film is mostly about family, family related places, unfamiliar sceneries that were seen while taking a walk with a friend, scenes of my hometown, Daegu, airport and streets of Paris while transiting a flight to Korea life of Berlin. - Suk Sung-suk, EXiS 10th anniversary screening catalogue, 2013

Programme duration: 77 min
This screening celebrates works produced by contemporary Korean artists within a wider global context, featuring works by the generation who came of age during the social and political opening up of Korea and have enjoyed unprecedented opportunities and cultural mobility and technological access. As well as utilising new technologies these works also explore political subjects from the Iraq War to the suppressed uprising and massacre in 1948 known as the ‘Jeju 4.3 Incident’. These works reflect on the original concern of early experimental films, yet they are produced and screened within the various new media exhibition platforms of the contemporary Korean and international art world.

Followed by discussion with Im Heung-Soon.

FORWARD, BACK, SIDE, FORWARD AGAIN
Seoungho Cho / 조승호, Korea/USA 1995, video, colour, sound, 11 min

[In] Forward, Back, Side, Forward Again people moving quickly past on a New York street at dusk are transformed, through long exposure and slow motion, into ghostly paths of light that swirl through the space of vision. The luminous images evoke the loneliness of a person in a crowd, the thousands of missed encounters leaving their traces on consciousness. An embodied view is encouraged, strangely perhaps, by these disembodied and floating images, for they approach the viewer not through the eyes alone but along the skin. - Laura U. Marks, ‘Video haptics and erotics, Screen, Winter 1998, p331

POWER PASSAGE / 파워통로
Park Chan-kyong / 박찬경, Korea 2004/2014, 2 channel HD video, colour, sound, 15 min

I imagine that one day the movies like Marooned directed by John Sturges and Robert Altman’s Countdown are screened in the underground tunnels of Korea, and then the world tourists are going to see some marooned spaceships at the artificial cave as experiencing both digging toil and high-end technology. Perhaps, the tourists would enjoy Korean Sci-fi films instead of US ones screened. To apply the US Sci-fi film chronology literally, the film about the space rendezvous between two Koreas will be produced in around 2010. (The Korean War occurred in 1950, South Korean satellite was launched in 1995 and 2004, and North Korea claims the launch of satellites in 1998 and 2009.) - Park Chan-kyong, ‘Drama of the cold war,’ Hermes Korea Missulsang catalogue, Hermes Korea & Artsonje Centre, Seoul, 2004

OVERLOADED ECHO
Koo Donghe / 구동희, Korea 2006, video, colour, sound, 8 min

A mysterious group of men and women have gathered: members of a secret society or participants in a reality show game, they become spectators and protagonists of a production that is at once absurd and disturbing, evolving the violence of certain images in the media, particularly those of the Iraq War. - Koo Donghee, EXiS 2014 festival catalogue, 2014

THE HANGING GARDEN / 공중정원
Yeondoo Jung / 정연두, Korea 2009, HD video, colour, sound, 15 min

This work, where the real and fake are mixed up, depicts a reality, in which both sides co-exist. It also experiments with how believably this fake story can be conveyed to the audience, who is accustomed to receiving controlled, manipulated images or videos through the broadcast media. Though the unusual images all look like something made with advances in technology such as a 3-D computer simulation, they are, in fact, done through great manual labor. The images of the announcer walking gracefully on the stage with the old palace in the background is achieved by the relay-like effort of many people carrying pieces of the stage setting and simultaneously following the camera’s movement. - Yeondoo Jung, Platform in Kimusa, Platform Seoul, 2009

The Hanging Garden presents a pseudo-history as an authentic looking TV narrator tells the secret story of the Hanging Garden of the Josun dynasty. Originally presented as a two screen installation, with one image presenting the history and the other revealing its fabrication.

JEJU SYMPTOM AND SIGN / SUNG SI

Im Heung-Soon / 임흥순, Korea 2011, HD video, colour, sound, 24 min

This video is inspired by the phrase ‘two omens: bamboo blossom and the morning star’ (4.3 Speaks, Vol. 4, pp. 341-342). Rather than deliver the mere historical factuality of Jeju 4.3, my intention, with a minimum of information through images and sounds, is to generate a situation of sympathy with human existence and its emotions, as it helplessly faces historical tragedy, In Sung Si, I wanted to depict situations at that time where happiness and safety were suddenly removed and anxiety and fearfully took control, and the desperation of survivors, whose lives could only to be lived through ‘praying hearts’ and forbidden mourning. Sung Si means disaster and omen in Jeju dialect. - Im Heung-soon, EXiS 2015 festival catalogue

Programme duration: 74 min
CONTEXTS AND TRANSFORMATIONS: KOREAN FILM AND VIDEO SINCE 1950

Actors do not behave or decide as atoms outside a social context, nor do they adhere slavishly to a script written for them by the particular intersection of social categories that they happen to occupy. Their attempts at purposive action are instead embedded in concrete, ongoing systems of social relations. – Mark Granovetter. 1985, ‘Economic action and social structure: the problem of embeddedness’. The American Journal of Sociology 91 p487

The term ‘embeddedness’ is borrowed from economic historian Karl Polanyi who argues in The Great Transformation 1944 that human economy is not autonomous but subordinated to and constrained by institutions such as in politics, religion and social relations. The term is one of the core concepts of economic sociology as such it is salient to the series and our attempt to trace the history of artist moving image practices in Korea where early forms of mass media were employed as a means of social control rather than a vehicle of personal expression. So much so that it was very difficult to find personal forms of expression in the medium of film until the early 2000. Largely dependent film technologies supported by overseas countries from US to Japan the Korean Film Industry has slowly developed from its beginnings during 1950s and the Korean War, through to the introduction of audio-visual education at Ewha Womans University with help from the US Information Service, to early 2000 when filmmaking classes opened in numerous universities.

In the late 1960s and early 1970s as interest in new filmic language saw the formation of several film groups and collectives were established such as ‘Cine-Poem’ coterie founded in 1964 Film 70’ founded in 1968, the Small Gauge Film Club founded in 1970 and Image Research Group founded in 1972. Many artists and filmmakers sought to find a new mode of film production, working with 16mm and super 8mm cameras used by the amateur film community. Yet without official production company registered to the government, all films made by personal & small film production system couldn’t screen at cinema space. They showed all the time at cultural center, USIS in context with public information service. But due in part to censorship in Korea at that time, as well as the absence of established networks for presenting experimental film, most of the artists that had begun experimenting with film and who had produced pioneering works in the 1960s and early 1970s had returned to painting or other art forms in subsequent years, many of their works abandoned until recently. The late Jumsun Kim, who took part in experimental filmmaking workshops at the Goethe Institute during the 1970s, stated that it was very difficult to access or reference western visual art and film during this time. One of the pioneers of video art in Korea, Hyun-ki Park (1942-2000) first came across the work of Nam June Paik, who primarily worked outside of Korea, in the archives of the American Cultural Centre in 1970s. Strict control and censorship of access to external cultures, extreme reduction of private spheres for artists activity and restrictions on the use of media that was only available to a limited number of well-connected or wealthy people continued to be the prevalent condition until the end of the 1980s in South Korea. In light of this, the work of Joong-woon Kwon who came across media theory in New York in the 1990s is critical. After returning to Korea, Kwon lectured in several universities and established the Korean Experimental Film Institute / 실험영화연구소. His work examined the history of American avant-garde and looked into the possibility of filmmakers utilising new media technology, as explored in Gene Youngblood’s Expanded Cinema published in 1970. In 1994 he published New Media Aesthetics and tried to create a form of continuity in the production, screening and archiving of work and the artists community based in the Korean Experimental Film Institute. Chang-jae Lim (Director, Korean Independent Film Association, 19???) and Dong-hyun Park (Director, Seoul International Experimental Film Festival 19???) later established their practices at this institute and are still working in this field. In the 1990s there were several production-based institutions such as Underground Creative Group - Pajeok / 지하창작 집단-파적 and CP16R which was connected to Culture School Seoul (now Seoul Art Cinema). These attempts to find an alternative meaning of cinematic expression were all different, focusing on either independent film or experimental film and issues of production, screening, distribution or funding. Emerged around the same they provided a sense that film was beginning to become more important in the Korean cultural scene. It is also important to note that in Korea up until the late 1990s political and sociological passion was always deemed to be more prioritised than personal expression in these alternative filmmaking projects. The Independent Film Camp which laid out various social agendas by raising political struggles and censorship issues, gradually became institutionalised in the 1990s, leading to the launch of the Independent Film Association. During this period the focus of the ‘alternative film’ was on alternative stories rather than alternative form of expression. The predominant view was that an alternative formal expression and exploration would detach independent films from the public. This lead to a separation of experimental film from the sphere of ‘independent film’ in Korea, leading various film festivals no longer including video art and experimental films in their programmes. Although there were various forms of experimental filmmaking practiced by artists/ filmmakers such as Chang-jae Lim and Yoon-tae Kim, it’s a common perception that a significant proportion of ‘experimental’ film began with the 1st Experimental Film Festival held in 1994 under the title ‘Ecstatic Visions: The Aesthetic of New Media Film’ featuring work by the generation of artists/filmmakers such as Lee Jang-wook, Minsu Yang, Donghee Koo, Park Donghyun who had studied at prestigious art schools abroad – such as The Art Institute of Chicago, San Francisco Art Institute. This supported the suspicion that experimental films made in Korea after the 1990s were in ‘western’ in conception, rather than works that had emerged from a process of self-invention within the specific cultural context of Korea.

Memory of Surface, Surface on Memory Lee Jang-wook’s graduation film became the centre of a debate regarding the collective and public viewing of the work and controversy regarding tension in the film between it’s recording of a private life and its more ‘Western’ form of expression, understood as the artists emphasising the specificity of the media itself.

In the 1990s various events helped to introduce moving image into the context of visual arts in Korea and open it this area of practice to a new generation of artists. From the two instrumental exhibitions in 1993 when the National Museum of Contemporary Art, Korea organised a Whitney Biennale in Seoul and the Taejon EXPO that was a milestone exhibition in the history of Korean contemporary art, 1993. At the end of the 1990s two other exhibitions proved instrumental the City and Moving Image / 도시와 영상 exhibition at Seoul Museum of Arts / 서울시립미술관 1998 and for the first time there was a screening of video art in the theatre of the Artsonje center November 1998.

At the turn of 2000 the film industry, both independent and commercial, had became fully acknowledged as a key component of Korea’s Creative Economy and universities began to provide training for people to work in the burgeoning film industry. From the mid-2000s onwards, we see more dynamism and variety in Korean artists’ cinematic work. Through moving image, photography and publishing Chan-kyung Park’s work is constantly searching for new methods to shed light on areas of Korean culture that the social sciences have seemingly ignored. He used shamanism to explore the relationship between North and South Korea, as well as the internal contradictions of Korean society. EXiS was launched as a festival of experimental film and video in 2004 with a survey of the history of Korean experimental film. At the same time the organisation Spacecell the first artist run film lab in Asia was founded to support the film community and has organised handmade filmmaking workshops since 2004.

Other recent artists include Kyung-man Kim who used his documentary film works as a means of political expression has made work based on research into the historical archives of the Korean government whereas the video and installation artist, Jae-kyu Byun explores the subject of memory and place in photography and Min-ha Park focuses on the problems of materiality and space through the use of special effects borrowed from the mainstream film-industry. Whereas artist/filmmakers such as Kyung geun Park, Yoon-suk Jung, Heung soon Im, to name but a few are all primarily working within the arts yet exploring the potential of documentary film as a way to study culture and to reinterpret Korean history advancing their artistic imagination. They look at different social issues such as the Jijon Clan case of the first serial killer that shook Korean society in the mid-1990s to the Chung-gye-chun area in Seoul that symbolises the modernisation and industrialisation of post-war Korea. Moving image has became a default media for many contemporary arts in Korea, many artists produced cinema as primary artistic practice from the work from artists such as Chan-kyung Park, Dong-hee Koo and Im Heung soon who are key artists to understand this phenomenon or the collaborative practice of Moon Kyungwon & Jeon Joonho who represented Korea at the Venice Biennial in 2015.
Hangjun Lee is the Program Director of EXiS, independent curator and filmmaker. He programmed Letterist Cinema, film performance and expanded cinema events and retrospective programmes of Ito Takashi, Okuyama Junichi, Michael Snow among others. He initiated Asia Forum 2009 at EXiS, an annual platform for Asian experimental moving images. He curated numerous screening programmes for international venues including Guling Avant-Garde theatre (Taipei), Green Papaya Art Project (Manila), Nanjing independent film festival (Nanjing) and OX warehouse (Macau). Recently he curated the opening commemoration screening programme Cinematic Divergence 2013, live film and improvised music festival Mujanhyang (anechoic) 2014 both for National Museum of Modern and Contemporary Art (MMCA) in Seoul. He performed with many musicians such as Jerome Noetinger (France), Hong Chulki (Korea), Dickson Dee (Hong Kong), Martin Tétreault (Canada), Sandra Tavali (Taiwan), Kricaon (Indonesia) to develop live filmic language as filmmaker. He edited Anthology of Asian Experimental Moving Image 2009 and has written for several film and art publications in Taiwan, China, South Korea.

LUX SALON WITH HANGJUN LEE
Monday 21 September, 19.00

Hangjun Lee will discuss experimental film and video practices in Asia from the 1930s to now. Lee will present various key works including pioneering documentary films in 1930s by Liu Na-ou from China as well as introduce artist film lab movements such as Spacecell (South Korea, founded in 2004), Lab Laba-Laba (Indonesia, founded in 2014).

EMBEDDEDNESS: ARTISTS FILMS AND VIDEOS FROM KOREA 1960S TO NOW
18–19 September 2015

Booklet edited by: George Clark with Hangjun Lee and Hyun Jin Cho.

Scott Miller Berry, Judith Bowdler, Ben Cook, Maria Palacios Cruz, Joan Kee, Kabsoo Kim, Sook-Kyung Lee, Andrea Lissoni, Samantha Manton, Je Yun Moon, Junho Oh, Sangnyang Park, Hanseung Ryu, Maria Montero Sierra, Ji Hyun Song, Unseong Yoo,