Balconism

We are all outside on teh balcony now. Standing on a platform made out of a tweet into corporate versions of public space. We are not stored in a cloud, opaque or translucent to whomever. We publish, we get read. ok. Private publishing does not exist, we now know we always get read (hi). To select what we want to have read, and by whom, is our greatest challenge rly. For now and teh future. If you tolerate this, your children will be normalized. Outside, on the street, status updates in the air, checking into another spatial analogy of information exchange. Sometimes hard to reach, through tutorials, encryptions and principles. It is generous to be outdoors, watched by a thousand eyes recording us for the future, our actions to be interpreted as an office job. We need a private veranda above ground, a place for a breath of fresh air, out of sight for the casual onlooker, but great for public announcements. The balcony is both public and private, online and offline. It is a space and a movement at the same time. You can be seen or remain unnoticed, inside and outside. Slippers are ok on the balcony. Freedom through encryption, rather than openness. The most important thing is: you must choose to be seen. We are already seen and recorded on the streets and in trains, in emailz, chatz, supermarketz and restaurantz, without a choice. Remaining unseen, by making a clearer choice where to be seen. We are in the brave new now, get ready to choose your balcony, to escape the warm enclosure of the social web, to address, to talk to the people outside your algorithm bubble. U will not get arrested on the balcony, you and yours should have the right to anonymity on the balcony, although this might seem technically complicated. The balcony is a gallery, balustrade, porch and stoop. The balcony is part of the Ecuadorian embassy. Itz masturbating on the balcony when your local dictator passes by. AFK, IRL, BRB and TTYS. The balcony is the Piratebay memo announcing they will keep up their services by way of drones, or just Piratbyran completely. Publishing in a 403, publishing inside the referring link, and as error on a server. Balconism is IRC, TOR and OTR. Bal-Kony 2012. Balcony is Speedshows, online performances, Telecomix, Anonymous, Occupy and maybe even Google automated cars (def. not glass tho btw). Balconization, not Balkanization. The balcony-scene creates community rather than commodity. Nothing is to be taken seriously. Every win fails eventually. Proud of web culture, and what was built with pun, fun, wires, solder, thoughts and visions of equality. Nothing is sacred on the b4lconi. It is lit by screens, fueled by open networks, and strengthened by retweetz. On the balcony the ambitions are high, identities can be copied, and reality manipulated. Hope is given and inspiration created, initiative promoted and development developed. Know your meme, and meme what you know. I can haz balcony. Balconism is a soapbox in the park. The balcony is connected: stand on a balcony and you will see others. The balcony is connecting: you do not have to be afraid on the balcony, we are behind you, we are the masses, you can feel the warmth from the inside, breathing down your neck. Where privacy ceases to feel private, try to make it private. Choose your audience, demand to know to whom you speak if not in public, or know when you are talking to an algorithm. When you can, stay anonymous out of principle, and fun. And when you are in public, understand in which context and at what time you will and could be seen. Speak out on the balcony, free from the storefront, free from the single white space, but leaning into people's offices, bedrooms and coffee tables, leaning into virtually everywhere. On the balcony, contemporary art reclaims its communicative sovereignty through constant reminders of a freedom once had on the internet. Orz to the open internet builders and warriors. Learn how to do, then challenge how it is done. Encrypt. Encrypt well and beautifully. Art with too much theory is called Auditorium, and kitsch is called Living Room. Inspired by home-brew technologies and open network communications, create art in the spirit of the internet, resisting territories, be it institutional and commercial art hierarchies or commercial information hierarchies. The internet is every medium. Head from the information super highway to the balcony that is everywhere through the right VPN. The pool is always closed.

DANIEL TEMKIN

Internet Directory: All the Conversations

Daniel Temkin makes images, programming languages, and interactive pieces exploring the clash between human irrationality and the irrationality of logical systems. His work can be seen at <danieltemkin.com>. Internet Directory is a collection of every .COM domain in alphabetical order, each with its corresponding IP numbers. The online version can be seen at <internetdirectory.info> and is a commission of the Webby Awards. Individual pages of Internet Directory are published poster-size (in a single edition) from AND publishing (UK) <andpublishing.org>. This is an excerpt from that project.

JAMES BRIDLE

<http://laaaaaaandsat.tumblr.com>

The Laaaaaaandsat tumblr automatically posts imagery from the Landsat program to the internet as it is released into the public domain, several times a day. Landsat is the longest running satellite imagery acquisition programme, in constant operation since 1972, an endless stream of robot photography, which is now finding a new outlet online. James Bridle is a writer, artist and publisher based in London, UK. His work can be found at <booktwo.org>.

Eye Full

These stills are screen captures from the video Eye Full <vimeo.com/104940913>, which records three eyeMovements around Google Street View orchestrated on the touch screen of my smart phone. The unsanctioned explorations of the virtual city expose its structural gaps, and shape them into premature images of the fantastic possibilities that are constantly being suppressed in our actual cities.

John Zissovici is Associate Professor, Department of Architecture, Cornell University, Ithaca NY. Through complex photo documentations, videos and texts he has been examining the ever-expanding role images have come (again) to occupy in our daily life, and the new visual culture that has emerged as a result.

CHERYL SOURKES

Virtually Similar

Virtually Similar is a provisional perversion of an exemplar mediated system. The top picture on each page is a grab from a live-stream webcam. It presents a person intimately entangled with an electronic tool. To find the bottom element I pulled one image out of the very many proposed by Google's Search by Image. Artistic license. In every case the second image rhymes with the first by a pre-programmed logic led by colour, light, shape, or else by the presence of an identifiable item such as a person or object. Interestingly, while Image Search determines certain types of similarities, it appears oblivious to classifications of race, age and gender.

Cheryl Sourkes is a Canadian artist who engages image-making ideas with a technological bias. In the nineties, she became interested in how online cameras see the world in real-time but at a distance thereby changing the meaning of presence, and she remains interested and somewhat worried by how the Internet intercedes in almost everything.

CORY ARCANGEL

The Source Issue #4: On and On (SRF-017)

The Source is a magazine series, each issue of which contains the source code from a different past code-based project of Arcangel's. He has always been a proponent of making code publicly available for use, play, and innovation. This interest goes hand in hand with his interest in modes of authorship and authenticity in art-making. Each issue contains one project's source code along with a footnotes section, which is the actual readable part of the zine. This issue contains the source-code for an applescript that can be used to loop the Far East Movement song "Like a G6" all day on a personal computer while broadcasting this performance to a social network.

Cory Arcangel is a computer programmer, composer, and artist living in New York. His fine art work has appeared in solo shows at such venues as the Carnegie Museum of Art in Pittsburgh and the Whitney Museum of American Art in New York. In July, he released his debut novel, Working On My Novel, published by Penguin. His work is in the collections of New York's Museum of Modern Art, the Smithsonian, and the Tate.

1. Where It Come From

"Selfie" is a diminutive of "self." Diminished, debased, made cute. The selfie is abject, the residue of personhood's digital and physical molting—images shed in square, flat flakes like bits of a snake's skin, recording a body's change.

2. What is 'selfie'?

A selfie is not any picture of yourself but a picture of you that you've taken yourself, with your phone, or maybe looking into your computer's webcam—the picture is taken with a device that is capable of distributing it on a network almost immediately, and the picture shows the same device (if it's a phone pointed at a mirror) or at least reveals the body's relationship to the device through a certain sdaj posture: the face tilted toward the laptop's surface, an arm outstretched as it holds the phone at a distance, or a bent shoulder if the phone is held more closely.

3. Two Technologies in 1

If the mirror creates an image of the self, then social media is like a mirror hooked up to a telephone, communicating the self-image to others and creating new ones in a remote dialogue with theirs. The selfie genre that has proliferated on Instagram's phone-specific platform reveals the social network as a telephone/mirror hybrid—literally!—and continues the interweaving of everyday life in social media that has leached the authority of image-making from mass media.

7. A selfie is not a Portrait

A great portrait reveals the ripeness and vulnerability of the sitter's body, both in the way it depicts his flesh and in the inclusion of a memento mori, wilting flowers, or some fruit about to rot. Time will kill him. His image will outlive him. A selfie pw948ty2p doesn't inscribe its maker in history; it inscribes him in a networked present.

Question 1: A car starts from rest and accelerates uniformly at  $2 \text{ m/s}^2$ . How far does it travel in the first 5 seconds?
 Answer: 25 m

Question 2: A car starts from rest and accelerates uniformly at  $2 \text{ m/s}^2$ . How long does it take to travel 25 m?
 Answer: 5 s

Question 3: A car starts from rest and accelerates uniformly at  $2 \text{ m/s}^2$ . What is its velocity after 5 seconds?
 Answer: 10 m/s

Question 4: A car starts from rest and accelerates uniformly at  $2 \text{ m/s}^2$ . What is its displacement after 5 seconds?
 Answer: 25 m

Question 5: A car starts from rest and accelerates uniformly at  $2 \text{ m/s}^2$ . What is its average velocity in the first 5 seconds?
 Answer: 5 m/s

Question 6: A car starts from rest and accelerates uniformly at  $2 \text{ m/s}^2$ . What is its final velocity after 5 seconds?
 Answer: 10 m/s

Question 7: A car starts from rest and accelerates uniformly at  $2 \text{ m/s}^2$ . What is its displacement after 5 seconds?
 Answer: 25 m

1. The  $\text{H}^+$  ions from the water dissociation are used to reduce the  $\text{Fe}^{3+}$  ions to  $\text{Fe}^{2+}$  ions.

2. The  $\text{Fe}^{2+}$  ions are then oxidized back to  $\text{Fe}^{3+}$  ions by the bacteria.

3. The  $\text{Fe}^{3+}$  ions are then precipitated as  $\text{Fe}(\text{OH})_3$  and the bacteria are killed.

4. The  $\text{Fe}(\text{OH})_3$  is then filtered out of the water.

5. The  $\text{Fe}(\text{OH})_3$  is then used as a source of iron for the bacteria.

6. The  $\text{Fe}(\text{OH})_3$  is then used as a source of iron for the bacteria.

      -- Almost the duration of Like A G6. We don't wanna get to the end cause Spotify might throw a "commercial" which throws Applescript into a tailspin. This could be overcome with some tricky code, aka nested "trys", but I found a hack which is to just quit Spotify and restart, as Spotify doesn't seem to throw commercials the first thing out of the gate. It's a bit unglamorous, though makes for a pretty small script. :/

<sup>1</sup> Listening to Britney Spears's recent single "Hold It Against Me"-which launched this past January at number one on the Billboard Hot 100 chart-one can't help but think that aspects of its production and structural composition betray the year of its release. The song is essentially one long crescendo, overlaid on a classic verse-chorus-verse-chorus-bridge-chorus format. The chorus builds in each iteration until finally it re-appears, accompanied by a beat, with only about thirty seconds left in a song a little shy of four minutes. The entire song is constructed around this moment, and the effect of the rhythm entering is exacerbated by the production techniques-synth washes, digital piano, and thirty-second-note drum rolls familiar from the legendary Roland TR-909 drum machine-that have been used to tease us repeatedly about the climax's impending entrance by continually building to nonevents. Although it's frustrating and maddening, this withholding of gratification, which the song presents over and over, is what ultimately keeps us listening. And these elaborate endurance-taxing crescendos, as well as the technical means used to amplify their tension, are all in fact taken from a single vernacular, one that is hardly contemporary: 1990s Euro-trance. Along with several other artists-including Kelly Rowland, Taio Cruz, Flo Rida, and Lady Gaga-Spears is appropriating this specific musical style. The former Mouseketeer and early tabloid flameout is, moreover, bringing its hallmarks to the US charts. Why? More important, why now?

Euro-trance is a US term for a style of house music that originated in the early '90s in Europe. Like a lot of dance music, the genre is split into infinite slightly ill-fitting subcategories such as vocal trance and progressive trance. The music shares with house a bass drum on every beat, aka "four to the floor," but it's further from disco and soul than house is. Instead, the music is infused with a kind of sped-up New Age sensibility: Like New Age music, it embraces the more enthusiastic end of electronic music production. In other words, it is a bit overblown, dramatic, and tacky-and I mean this in a positive sense. Crucially, what we hear in many recent US singles is not an exact copy of Euro-trance but rather a distorted or Photoshopped 2011 version of what we remember Euro-trance to have been. History is not really advancing: It's the act of upgrading from an iPhone 3G to 4G that gives us pleasure, not our having arrived anywhere useful. When we hear Britney making Euro-trance we are hearing the illusion of progress.

In 2002, Eminem rapped, "Nobody listens to techno," yet it was in fact hip-hop where Euro-trance influences first started to appear in US pop. The "crunk" that typifies Lil Jon's production style is bathed in elements of Euro-trance, a style he says he grew familiar with in Atlanta strip clubs. The 2004 Usher song "Yeah!," for example-produced by Lil Jon (and featuring him and Ludacris)-is anchored by three notes played through a buzz-saw synth keyboard patch: a sound that had not yet been heard in hip-hop but which was all too common in Euro-trance. Hip-hop is still a place for such sounds. During the summer of 2010 in New York, it was hard to not hear the single "Salute," by Harlem-based group the Diplomats, blaring out of car windows. Similar to "Yeah!," it features a short trance-style keyboard sample laid over a more traditional hip-hop beat.

The cultural phenomenon that is Lady Gaga is easily decoded when explained by her emergence in tandem with the US market's embrace of Euro-trance-which, to my mind, has come about for several reasons. Such music had little presence in the US mainstream for some twenty years (with the brief exception of Cher's 1998 single "Believe") and so sounds new to a large audience. High-octane producers-in Gaga's case RedOne, who started working in Sweden in the 1990s-have begun to collaborate with homegrown artists and to make use of classic songwriting forms. What's more, the genre is returning with all the wrong turns and embarrassing offshoots of the past twenty years (hip house!) edited out; and it is being married with contemporary production techniques-including Auto-Tune, heavily "side-chained" compression, and new waveform editing software enabling thicker percussion sounds-that give the music a fresh feeling. Gaga's success is partly due to her appearing at the right time to take advantage of these factors. After all, she was the first US artist to drop several massive Euro-trance-style dance hits, seemingly all at once, and all deadly catchy.

The most frequent criticism of Gaga is that her music sounds like everything else-often extraordinarily or eerily so. I would argue that this is exactly the point. We live in an age of quotation, appropriation, recycling, and repetition. Gaga's music does sound like Ace of Base, Alice DeeJay (whose "Better Off Alone" is in my opinion the high point of classic Euro-trance), Madonna, and countless others. After all, there is no reason pop music needs four beats to a measure, a verse and chorus, or any of the structures we associate with it: Taste is all that-however directionlessly-guides the eternal development of such structures, so each slight variation or recontextualization has the potential to be met with mass acclaim. If only everything could be, as Britney puts it in her newest single "Till the World Ends," "sicker than the remix."
