The experimental art group was formed in 1970 in Arad/Transylvania/Romania, as a satellite of the local School of the Arts. Later, it became part of the Museum of Art as its Multimedia Workshop. The founding member, George Sabau, was a professor of Aesthetics at the High School for the Arts in Arad. Most of the current members of the group are his former pupils, Alumni of the High School of the Arts.

During its first twenty years of activity (1970-1990), kinema ikon created over 60 experimental short films, synchronous with Western art practices: kinetic abstractions, scratch animation, surrealist films, non-figurative dynamic forms painted directly onto film, visual essays constructed from fragments of material reality, etc. Under the Communist regime, these works could be seen almost exclusively as “samizdat.” Although an important presence in the Romanian art scene of the time, kinema ikon was banned from participating in exhibitions abroad by the political, secret police. However, immediately after the fall of the Berlin Wall, kinema ikon was able to respond to an invitation to screen a selection of experimental movies at the Centre Pompidou/Cinéma du Musée/ curated by Jean-Michel Bouhours.

The use of the term experimental in relation to our practice is not solely tied to the esthetics of the moving image. It also applies to our interdisciplinary approach, to the transference of creative languages in between multiple fields. The members of our group specialized in visual arts, architecture, philology, music and photography, instead of cinematography. They agreed to partake in the game, creating experimental films the use the vocabulary and grammar of other alternative media.

After the fall of communism, during the next four years (1990-1994) the group focused on video art and video projection installations. In 1994 came a radical change, when a new generation became interested exclusively in digital art, and for the next ten years the group worked primarily on digital support (CD.ROM, DVD) and net.art platforms. Amongst the most important works from this period were Calin Man’s on-line projects (Man is presently the leader of the group), interactive multimedia installations and, also the magazine, Intermedia – the group’s periodical, which includes theoretical texts. kinema ikon has participated in numerous national and international art exhibitions.

Since 2004 until today (2015), kinema ikon’s youngest generation, kinema ikon:

texts
Allow me to digress, if I haven’t done so already.

Point of reference #1: Arad, which for the purposes of this writerly Experiment, will become The Smallest Place on Earth, i.e. the place from which all else grew, the place to which all other experiences of Place relate, since it was the point where “I” grew. The author is present; her spirit is home.

Proposition #1: a pause from the undoubtedly avid browsing you are engaged in, as we speak. Allow the catalogue you’re holding in your hands to rest. I propose we begin with the silent contemplation of the prophetic phrases at the end of George Sabau’s “Contextual History of kinema ikon” published on the occasion of the group’s 2005 exhibition “retrospect kinema ikon ’70 – ’05” at MNAC, Bucharest and at the Art Museum, Arad. Let the words fall in

At the 2020 jubilee, what I have called the kinema ikon project, will be perceived by the next generation as a heterogeneous system of digital and analogic creative procedures, while old group members will have the nostalgia of the pixels of yore... Anyway, the voxels of synthetic images will constitute the main minimal units by means of which artists of the future will create the dazzling fictitious universes of virtual reality...

Point of reference #2: Longevity, kinema ikon is a rare survivor of the experimental art movements that emerged in Romania during the Communist-era. Furthermore, kinema ikon remains true to its original goal: to engage and promote experimentation in art, to tap into contemporary technologies and their most novel applications in art and life.

Proposition #2: As 2020 approaches, and as mankind passionately contemplates the birth and death of the universe, devising possibilities for the extension of life, a significant portion of conversations on art will undoubtedly either resist or explore similar notions. If Mr. Sabau is correct, by then, this text will become a real-time conversation and will occur in the absolutely “dazzling fictitious universes of virtual reality.” The work they will have created by then, and the processes by which that work will manifest, playing equally important parts in their legacy; “the medium is the message” as per Marshall McLuhan’s oft-quoted phrase.

My training as an art historian tells me that in order to bring critical reflection to kinema ikon’s enduring artistic practice, we must first and foremost acknowledge the group’s history, its ancestry, its process, the philosophical routes it has set into play since 1970, year 0.
Between 1970 and 1989 kinema ikon – Atelier de Film Experimental [Experimental Film Workshop] produced sixty-two 16mm films. While largely isolated from the broader contemporary art world during the 70s and 80s, the members of the group gathered weekly for screenings and discussions of film and contemporary art. The workshop's eclectic program for experimental art making, centered on a vested interest in art theory and the philosophy of science and technology, as in their respective application to new media. The resulting work digressed from film to photography, sound, print, symposia, events, and early experiments with computer art and cybernetics. 1989 – the year of the Romanian revolution, the fall of the Berlin wall and the Ceausescu regime – marked a break, and the group's interests shifted towards digital media, expanding onto the web, and into the street.

Working under the prescribed roles for the arts and the prohibitive sanctions of the totalitarian regime, kinema ikon did not brand itself with politics. However, the use of medium and the type of work – experimental par excellence – constituted a political statement in itself. Neither directly oppositional nor aligned, kinema ikon remains a prime example of the resistance of late-avant-garde, experimental art movements within the confines of the totalitarian state; their multi-channeled, interdisciplinary approach to art and technology a counterpoint to the single channel, linear modus operandi of the censorship, surveillance, and repression apparatus of the state. Similarly, in the years since kinema ikon has continued to operate on the margins of dominant cultural discourses – whether transitional during the 90s, or idealistically de-centered, polarized, yet often conventional, in the period since.

The post-war experimental art movements in Romania, and the subversive / resistant cultural scene of the 80s have been central to seminal studies by historians Magda Carneci and Alexandra Titu, as well as important essays by Calin Dan, Alex Leo Serban, Ileana Pintilie and Adrian Guta. Similar issues have been addressed in numerous exhibitions of pre-89 and 90s art from Eastern Europe, hosted by prestigious institutions throughout the world. Yet the question of politics – whether partisan, complacent, subversive or resistant – remains problematic for a broader range of cultural production that sits uneasily within such compartmentalized typologies and definitions. More often than not the few avant-garde movements or isolated (and thus glorified) instances of dissident art from the 60s to the 80s are (too) easily fitted into by now orthodox narratives of divisions between East and West, centers and peripheries, resistance, partisanship, communism/post-communism/nationalism/capitalism/neo-liberalism, etc.

While the history of repression cannot be changed – its memory must be revised. Because more often than not, what current discussions of the esoteric postmodern avant-gardes of the East leave out are their truly subversive aesthetic foundations. Other theoretical models must be devised to clarify instances of continuity and consistency within the history of groups such as kinema ikon, and their conceptually cohesive bodies of work. Longevity. Place. Perhaps there were, as there continue to be, more subtle ways of undermining authority. kinema ikon presents, I would argue, an exemplary chimera that instrumentally places technology and its convoluted relationship to aesthetics at the center of art discourse. With technology, one must catch that brief moment between its truly experimental stage and the already nostalgic, before Memory, before it is past – since all Memory was an experiment first.
Out of the multitude of terms having symbolized tendencies, styles, poetics and aesthetic trends of the last fifty years, I have tried to select just three, sufficiently eloquent and representative for the quintessence of the extremely controversial and sophisticated artistic practice from the 60s to our day. The methodological approach of selection through a chain of exclusions would prove highly subjective, thus not being able to become operational, a reason for which I started from the instruments / aesthetic works producing devices, in order to transcend the complicated themes of styles, materials, and contents.

In short, the three winning terms were Installation, Projection and Visualization, which will become the three elements of a skepsis, or a structure of functioning of the exhibition under the umbrella brand kinema ikon, bearing the name Wunderkammer ki, and constituting in the same time the matrix of the future one author exhibitions, of the young generation of creators of objects and aesthetic events. In conclusion, a brief description of the three operational concepts is necessary.

Thus, the first term is more correctly to be circumscribed by the phrase Installation of objects, which in their turn, could be physical visual objects, vintage curios, optical-acoustic devices, but also visual works – paintings, drawings, photographs, sculptures, decorative art, various types of design, tinkered artifacts etc.

The operational term Projection of images is more complex, especially after the emergence of the new technologies, and thus we can speak about two types of images, the classical analogical images, and the new digital images. The former can be found in the techniques of photography, moving pictures, videotape and television. We owe the latter to the digital system, and they are to be found under various formats on a lot of devices such as computers, mobile phones, tablets, digital video film, and others, to come. The two types of images share the feature that they are immaterial, in counter-distinction to the materiality of objects, their common denominator being called screen / monitor / display.

Therefore, this kinema ikon event presents itself as a hybrid structure, constructed three-ways from Objectual Installation / Analogical Images Projections / Digital Images Visualizations, in such a way interconnected, that the public receive them as a unitary work in an Interactive Multimedia format, having as background the mirific / sic / story of the kinema ikon group, under the brand of the stimulative umbrella.
The starting associative element is represented by the so-called Curiosity Cabinets of the Renaissance, called Wunderkammer, and exhibiting, on tables, shelves and in glass cabinets a disconcerting variety of natural and / or artificial things, that is, a sort of installation of bizarre objects, able to transmit certain states of wonder and spiritual uneasiness. This structure was combined with technical devices, which projected phantasmagoric images, often dubbed by strange sounds, in their turn realized with the help of sophisticated apparatus.

The two emphasized terms – installation and projection – are operational in the exhibitional kinema ikon project too, with a few obvious differences. Thus, the exhibited objects are not merely tinkered artifacts, but works of art too, which means that the Installation in its entirety is an explicitly aesthetic objectual collage. The second notable difference was imposed after the appearance of the new digital technologies, by the spectacular development of a new type of projection, whose emergence takes place from within the device towards its surface – computer, tablet, mobile phone, digital video – as distinct from analogical projection – from the dark room to the cinematographic and video techniques –, where projection takes place from a projector towards a screen. The functional equivalent of the receiving form called screen bears in the digital system the name of display, with complementary meanings in English, such as visualizing, exposition, posting, display / !, and, in the same time, monitor.

Therefore, an informed viewer can discern a skepsis of the exhibition, whose functional structure has as a model the concept of Wunderkammer, adapted at the new media of creation and communication, both maintaining active their quality of expressing themselves in a hybrid form of expression, able of producing chimerae, understood as nonexistent beings made up from existent beings, an operation possible to achieve only by means of stupefying images producing machines. Anyway, this exhibitional project is constructed on the tripartite ground of the three constituent media, i. e. – Installation / Projection / Visualization –, characteristic for producing paradoxical effects, due to the faculty of the three creative media of stimulating each other and, to an equal extent, by the associative capacity of the viewer, provoked to slightly interactive and obviously playful, which confirms once again the experimental and ludical dimension of the kinema ikon group.
